

Delivering care at home:

Emerging models and their implications for sustainability and wellbeing

Focus of our current work:

Emerging innovative home care models in different local and national UK contexts; the capacity of innovative home care models in the UK have to support sustainable care at home and wellbeing outcomes; mechanisms through which this is achieved; in planning home care, and its potential future use of technologies, what can be learned from other countries about how home care models affect the wellbeing of those using and providing care, with particular reference to innovative provision in Australia and New Zealand?
